Reading Text A: Lost Leonardo
[A] Leonardo da Vinci was born in Italy in 1452. While he is known as a painter, geologist, inventor, scientist, and architect, da Vinci can perhaps be most accurately described as a creative genius. Although he made significant advances in many fields of study, he is most remembered for his contributions to the world of art. Today, visitors hoping to see his most famous masterpiece, the Mona Lisa, may wait in line at the Louvre art museum in Paris for hours to see it. The diversity and quality of da Vinci’s talents, combined with his historical and cultural importance, make each and every one of his works priceless.

[B] Ironically, in his own time, da Vinci’s work was not always so well appreciated. In the 1550s, artist Giorgio Vasari was commissioned to remodel the Hall of 500 and paint over Leonardo’s existing unfinished mural, The Battle of Anghiari. However, according to one rumor, Vasari himself was a fan of da Vinci and didn’t want to destroy the original work. Now, almost five hundred years later, Seracini is finding clues that perhaps Vasari did not destroy Leonardo’s masterpiece after all.

[C] Seracini found his first clue in the 1970s, while examining a section of Vasari’s mural, The Battle of Marciano. He found a strange inscription on the work, Cerca trova (“Look and you will find.”). Did Vasari build a false wall in front of Leonardo’s original mural to protect it? A radar scan did in fact detect a hollow space behind the mural, strengthening the possibility that a lost da Vinci is hidden in plain sight.

[D] Seracini’s project is currently on hold as he waits for permission to investigate further. The risk of damaging Vasari’s work is still a major concern that might prevent the project from moving forward. Still, the possibility of finding a lost da Vinci is worth the risk to many in the art world. According to art historian Martin Kemp, “if it’s discovered, it would be one of the most famous discoveries of a century.”

(Excerpts from World Class 2, p. 127.)

41. Which of the following statements about Leonardo da Vinci is true?
   (A) Mona Lisa and the Hall of 500 are both his famous masterpieces.
   (B) He fought in The Battle of Anghiari.
   (C) Cerca trova was inscribed by da Vinci on The Battle of Marciano.
   (D) His work was highly appreciated by Giorgio Vasari.

42. According to paragraph C, Seracini’s job is mainly about ________.
   (A) developing new ways to study art and historic buildings using advanced technologies
   (B) inscription and translation
   (C) building walls
   (D) writing stories about battles

43. According to paragraph C & D, what happens to Seracini’s project?
   (A) For fear that Vasari’s work might be destroyed, Seracini was not given a green light to go on his project.
   (B) Most people in the art world worry about the risk of damaging Vasari’s work.
   (C) According to Martin Kemp, Seracini has made a great contribution to the century.
   (D) Seracini has found da Vinci’s lost painting behind Vasari’s work.
Reading Text B: The Real Mr. Bean

First appearing in 1990, the comic character Mr. Bean quickly became famous around the world for his charming originality. Mr. Bean’s humor is communicated not with words, but through mime and visual jokes, so it can appeal to everyone. Rowan Atkinson, the actor who plays Mr. Bean, has degrees in electrical engineering from both Newcastle University and Oxford University. His career in comedy began while he was studying at Oxford. He went on to appear in several popular TV comedy shows. In 1981, he was the youngest performer to have a one-man show in London’s West End theater district. He has also appeared in many movies, including one called Bean, which starred his famous character. Interestingly, Rowan Atkinson is a very private man and has apparently never given an interview as himself, preferring to take the role of Mr. Bean for any public appearances. He lives in Oxfordshire with his wife Sunetra and their children Lily and Benjamin.

Reading Text C: A Thousand Years of Foot Binding

[A] There are a number of legends concerning the origins of foot binding, but it seems likely that it started as a fashion amongst court dancers of the T’ang Dynasty (A.D. 618–690). It then became a required procedure for all royal females, and then girls of wealthy families. These women inevitably became confined to their home and were dependent on personal servants for their every need. This left them powerless and subservient to their husbands and other males in their family—which was part of Confucian thinking. What may have started out as a fashion for small feet quickly became a symbol of social status. In other words, bound feet were necessary to protect the honor of a family. While we may feel great sympathy for these upper class women, the situation of women of lower classes who were expected to continue with heavy labor at home and in the fields must have been far worse. And as the practice spread throughout the general population of China and lasted for nearly one thousand years, it is estimated that nearly a billion women endured the suffering it inflicted.

[B] There were variations in the procedure itself, but the following provides a general overview. Between the ages of four and seven, usually during winter time, when the cold would numb the pain, a girl’s four small toes were broken and forced under the sole of her foot. A bandage was tightly wrapped around the toes, keeping them in place. It was further tightened each day and this continued for at least another two years until the girl’s feet were virtually useless. In addition to being subjected to this pain, a woman with bound feet would be at risk of infection if her toenails cut into her foot. The lack of circulation could also result in gangrene, so the foot had to be massaged daily to get the blood moving. Pus and blood had to be washed away every day as the smell was highly offensive. However, women’s bound feet could also be the subject of erotic poetry and many considered that no woman could be seen as sexually desirable without them.
